Early New Zealand Books Collection

- The collection aims to provide a complete online full-text and keyword-searchable corpus of books about New Zealand which were published in the first two-thirds of the nineteenth century.
- Many of them have been available only in print, and in restricted library collections. Memoirs and collections of letters and journals from the period which were published later are also included.
- Accounts by early travellers are a prime source of information about traditional Maori society and culture as well as early European settlement.

though he had not come with the party) was the man who had been selected as Bishop. He had not yet been actually appointed, and indeed never was, and was perhaps more confident about it than were others about him. All the pros and cons there anent do not relate to my life. I only mention one of the cons as expressed strongly by one of those young lads of the College (who took to sailing and was the Bishop's companion in his voyages) when the good man paid a visit on board the Undine in Lyttelton harbour - "that a Bishop? Why he does not know a holy stone when he sees it."

It was in February 1851 that my sweet child fell asleep. She was full of life a very few days before, but drooped suddenly. It was at Taurarua she died and at S. Johns we laid the little body to rest. Mr. Lloyd carried the little coffin down to the boat, Bishop Abraham taking the service.

UNITED SERVICE IN AUCKLAND.

UNITED SERVICE IN AUCKLAND.
(BY TELEGRAPH.—PRESS ASSOCIATION.)
AUCKLAND, 3rd August.
The churches of Auckland united yesterday in prayers for peace. Special hymns were sung, and in at least one church the evening service closed with the singing of the "National Anthem." From pulpits, references were made to the gravity of the situation. A stirring address was delivered by Dr. A. W. Averill, Anglican Bishop of Auckland, at St. Alban's Church.
"We are face to face," he said, "with the possibility of a great European war, and news which has reached us to-day of the declaration of war between Germany and Russia is all the more disquieting, for no sane man would possibly dare to predict the end or issue of such a war. Perhaps the saddest part of it all is that many of us must feel that the present war seems to have no real justification. It humbles and shames us to think that such a war could be possible in the twentieth century, and that our boasted civilisation has so failed to bring about higher and nobler methods of settling international differences. If we are bound in honour to fight, we shall do our duty as we have always tried to do it in the past. God grant that our Empire may be saved from having to enter into the conflict. This is a time for prayer more than talking; for humiliation rather than jingoism; the searching of hearts more than of foolish boasting."

- A series on the "Christian in the thermonuclear age"

These two articles, dealing with the practical aspects of war and pacifism, conclude our series on the Christian in the thermonuclear age. The intention has been to present fairly both sides of this Christian dilemma.

We set out below a questionnaire to test Anglican thought on this subject. The results of this could be of immense interest and value, and we urge readers to fill this in and return it without delay to: Church and People, G.P.O. Box 2491, Wellington.

The results will be published in due course.

	Yes.	No.	Uncertain.
Is pacifism a legitimate Christian stand?
Is war contrary to New Testament teaching?
Is war to be chosen as the lesser of two evils?
Have nuclear weapons made war strategically untenable?
Have nuclear weapons made war morally untenable?
Have nuclear weapons changed the moral issues at all?
Should nuclear testing continue?
Should we disarm regardless of what other nations do?
